D-Rad motorcycles were produced between 1921 and 1933 by the Berlin-based Deutsche Industrierwerke and designed by engineer Christiansen.

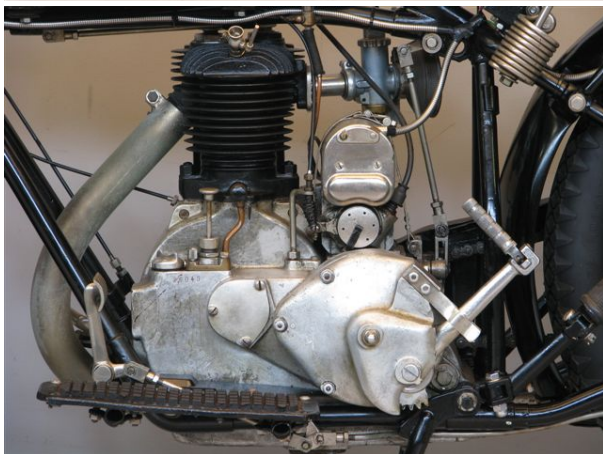

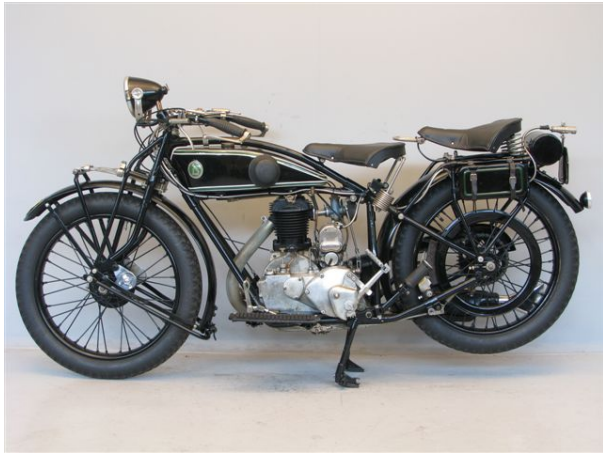

The machines were nicknamed "Springboks from Spandau" and constitute the archetype of 1920s German motorcycle design: sturdy, strong and well-built.

This R04 has a 49cc (82x94) unit construction engine, hand -operated three speed gearbox and trailing link front forks with leaf spring suspension.

This machine comes complete with Bosch electric lighting system and passenger seat and is a well-restored example of German motorcycle design.
